ADDENDUM B

OXFORD CITY TRAVEL GUIDE

Oxfordshire is a large county in South East England, on the southern fringes of the West Midlands. Oxfordshire is home to the ancient university city of Oxford and fascinating towns and villages along the River Thames.

The University of Oxford was founded in the 12th century and therefore constitutes the oldest English-speaking university. Oxford, like Cambridge, differs from many other universities in that there is no 'campus' as such, and no central university building. Instead, the University consists of approximately 40 colleges and several world-class museums.

Each college has its own individual character, some date from the 13th century, others are merely a few decades old.

Many of the colleges are closed to the public, particularly during term times; some, however, are open at different times. For example: Christ Church is mostly open, and has the added bonus of having a (small) cathedral attached, where excellent music is performed at Evensong every day, it also has an excellent art gallery. Some of Christ Church's buildings are used in films such as 'Harry Potter'.

While Oxford has an airport of its own at Kidlington, there are currently no scheduled commercial flights, and hence the airport is used only for private and charter flights.

The nearest commercial airports to Oxford are those around London, to the south-east, Birmingham, to the north, and Southampton to the south, with most foreign travellers preferring the London airports.

Heathrow is certainly the closest major airport to Oxford, followed by Gatwick in terms of size and popularity.

Road access from both Heathrow and Gatwick is by M25 and then the M40 to Oxford's outskirts.

Oxford is also linked to England’s capital, by road access, the 50 mile (80 km) south-eastern stretch of the M40 motorway.

Oxford has a large railway station in the western part of the city (immediately west of the city centre and south of Jericho). Fast First Great Western trains run to and from London Paddington every half an hour, taking about an hour to complete the journey.

Frequent and comfortable coach services run from several convenient bus stops to Gloucester Green coach station in Oxford, normally starting at London's Victoria Station, running westwards via Marble Arch, Notting Hill and Shepherd's Bush and then onwards to Oxford.
